WELLS FARGO

Felekech Petros is a single mother who works several part time jobs to support her three children and elderly mother. Originally from Ethiopia, she and her family came to the United States in 2002 to “look for a better life” and landed in Sacramento.

For the past six years, the family of 5 has lived in an over-crowded, two-bedroom apartment. Felekech’s son and daughters are both in school – her son Abael hopes to one day be a civil engineer and her two daughters, Martha and Hannah, hope to be nurses. They have long dreamed of one day having a home of their own where they would have privacy and room to study.

The Petros family was accepted into the Habitat program in November of 2016. The entire family worked side by side to contribute to the 500 required hours of sweat equity.

Says Abael, “The sweat equity is fun, I really like volunteering and I’m learning a lot of things. You also see and meet a lot of good people, which makes you want to work harder.”
